Furniture fire safety rules in UK drive 'unnecessary use of hazardous chemicals'

Isabella Kaminski, 8 Nov 2016

UK fire safety tests force producers to make furniture with significant volumes of brominated flame retardants

The European Furniture Industries Confederation (EFIC) is planning to lodge a formal complaint with the European Commission in the next few weeks, claiming UK furniture regulations lead to the unnecessary use of hazardous chemicals.